

Course Title: Family Law-I
Course Code: IL-C-302

Course Objective: This paper is designed to introduce the students to understand and reflect upon the nature and basic concepts of Muslim Law and understand the set of challenges Muslim religious laws face during the wake of national and international developments in the socio-political context. The course will also make the students aware of the government's legislative measures right from the time of the British till the present government and the role of the Judiciary in bringing reforms in uplifting the position of women, particularly in the laws of divorce and maintenance.

Course Outcome: By the end of this module, the students will understand and engage in the theoretical discourse regarding Islamic law, specifically in understanding the development of principles of sources of Muslim law in the area of family, property rights and its incorporation into legislation contextual skills. Understand and appreciate the various concepts employed in constructing Islamic law. Be able to differentiate between 'divine' and 'human-made' legal principles and laws based on reformist principles in Islamic law. Students will gain skills of thinking, analysis, written and verbal presentation of argument ideas.